WNBA Tulsa group hits NYC

Tulsa grabbed some of the spotlight in New York City this week as a group of investors and supporters of the effort to bring the WNBA to Tulsa spent time in the Big Apple watching the Tulsa Ballet's performance at the Joyce Theater. Following the performance, supporters of the franchise including Tulsa Mayor Kathy Taylor (above) and investor Pat Chernicky (right) met up with WNBA President Donna Orender. WNBA investors Stuart, Linda and Jackie Price also attended the events. The visit was part of a night highlighting Tulsa's economic development. Oklahoma governor Brad Henry also made the trip.

David Box: Building support 'one person at a time' for WNBA

In a front page story in the Tulsa World, WNBA Tulsa's David Box, who is spearheading the campaign for a team along with Bill Cameron, told the story of growing his own business and how he'd like to help "bring a party" to Tulsa by landing the WNBA franchise.

Box grew Box Talent into a leader in promoting events, concerts and artists and now he has his sights set on a major league franchise for Tulsa.

"And I'm usually trying to get a little good time in there myself," Box said in the Tulsa World article.

"I think this will continue to be a good time. It has been a good 20 years... My whole career has been putting on events and parties and then I got in the country club (The Greens) business, which is events, so I am excited about Tulsa being one big event."

Paris making an impact

As Tulsa gets attention of WNBA watchers, another Oklahoman is breaking through in her rookie season.

Courtney Paris, the All-American from Oklahoma, was nominated for WNBA Player of the Week after the best performance of her career.

Paris made her first eight shots and finished with 19 points in a loss to the New York Liberty.
