What's the latest? Find out Wednesday at Press Club

What do you want to know about Tulsa's effort to get a WNBA Franchise? Bill Cameron and David Box, who are leading the charge, will talk about the team at the Tulsa Press Club's Page One Luncheon on Wednesday.

The cost is $12 for members and $15 for nonmembers. Everyone is encouraged to attend. Lunch will be served beginning at 11:15 a.m. and Box and Cameron will begin at noon. A short question and answer session will follow.

The Tulsa Press Club is located in the lobby of the Atlas Life Building at 415 S. Boston. For reservations, call the Tulsa Press Club at (918) 583-7737.

Orender says WNBA deals put league in great shape

WNBA President Donna Orender has been making the rounds to different league cities this season and talking about the WNBA's bright future.

In a recent stop in Phoenix, Orender explained how the WNBA has positioned itself with a solid television contract and a good foundation in future media opportunities.

"We have a television deal that's better than MLS, that's better than the NHL. We have terrific television coverage. We have over 100 games on cable television and we have over 200 games on the Web. We do have pretty expansive coverage," she said.

"Wait till you see what happens in the media industry. I think we are the next step. I don't think it goes that way. I think it comes the other way. I think it comes to where we are."

Nolan Richardson possible coach for WNBA Tulsa team

It looks like one possible addition to the WNBA Tulsa sideline could be a Tulsa coaching legend.

According to reports, ex-University of Tulsa and Arkansas coach Noland Richardson is being wooed to become part of Tulsa's major league sports addition.

"All I can say is we had some more discussions, and we are going to have some more," Richardson said in a phone interview with the Tulsa World.

Richardson won an NCAA title with the Razorbacks in 1994 and was credited with launching Tulsa into big-time basketball with an NIT title in 1981.
